Prince Street Gallery will host an exhibition of paintings and drawings by Carl Plansky who lived and worked in New York City from 1971 until his death in 2009. The survey will include work created in his Brooklyn and Catskill studios as well as a series of watercolor and acrylic landscapes and figure paintings from his studio in Budapest, Hungary.

Plansky was founder of Williamsburg Handmade Oil Colors for Artists. He was a prolific painter and a well-respected teacher and lecturer. This highly-anticipated exhibition will contain art created over a thirty-year period to include artwork from his visits to abstract expressionist Joan Mitchell's studio in Vétheuil, France in the late 1970s and early 1980s.

Plansky is considered by many to be one of America's unsung artistic gems. At the time of his death in 2009 his three studios yielded a collection of over one thousand pieces of art. The collection is held by Larry Elder Art Consultancy in Charlotte, North Carolina whose mission is to preserve the legacy of this important American artist.

Copies of a newly published coffee table book of the artist's work will be available during the exhibition as well as online at www.carlplansky.com.
