The members of the Prince Street Gallery are pleased to present the work of one of their own, Arthur Hughes, in an exhibition So Retro: 30 Years of Painting from December 31 to January 25.

This is his fifth exhibition, and fourth solo one, at Prince Street Gallery since joining in 2007. In the most recent one, co-member Rani Carson and Hughes collaborated in the two-artist Wah Fe Do?/What Is to Be Done, in 2022.

He is a landscape artist focused on black-and-white graphic images inspired by time spent on Cape Cod; and in Ojai, California, and the Southwest. His sensibility has been inspired by teachers and friends: the artist Malcolm Brown of Taos, New Mexico in high school; James Gahagan, artist and collaborator with Hans Hofmann in the late 1960s; the NO!art artist and Holocaust survivor Boris Lurie; and others.

In 2022 he became a member of the Federation of Modern Painters and Sculptors, founded in 1940, and exhibited in its annual shows.

More of his work can be seen at arthurhughes.net.
